RECRUITING

Social media isn't just a platform for socializing, it can also be a beneficial tool for recruitment. Today, people are relying on social media to help them find jobs, and by sharing your open positions on LinkedIn, Facebook, Instagram, Twitter or TikTok, you expand visibility of your job ad to many potential candidates. Below you will find several examples of job openings businesses have posted on social media. Along with posting the open position to your company site, consider the following:

Determine if you need to pay money to boost and promote the job posting.

Include a link to the job posting or your company's career page so potential candidates can access additional information.

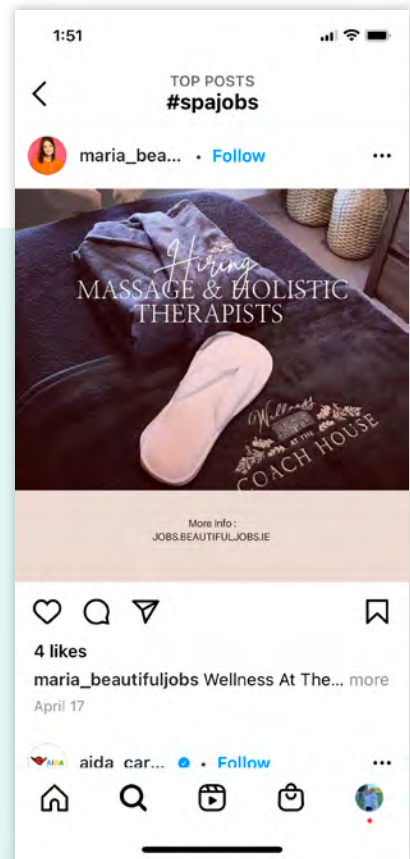

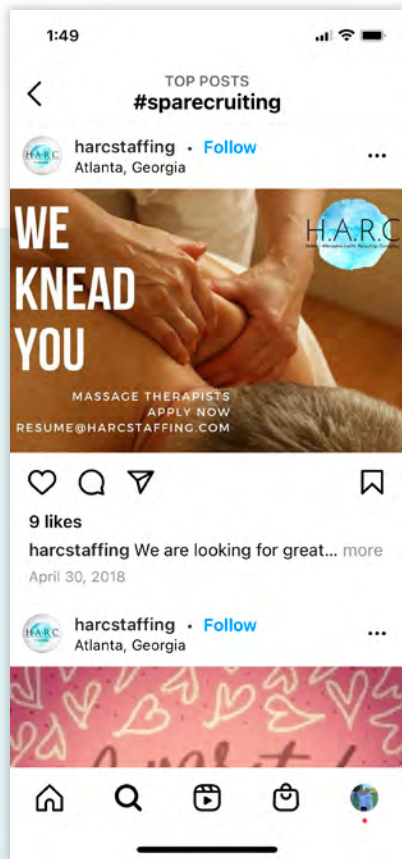

Ask colleagues to also share the company's post on their pages to help reach a larger audience.

Be sure to actively monitor and respond to inquiries from different social media outlets such as comments or direct messages. The recruitment process doesn't end once you hit post!
